Lischkoff, and their families spent Sunday enjoying at Magnolia Bluff, driving out in the cool of the morning and leaving about 6 in the evening.

On their return, they sought refuge from the approaching storm in a house near the bridge and were treated to a magnificent electrical display they will not soon forget. The mysterious fire fluid danced and played in jets and flames along the wires and metallic portions of the bridge in a way that frightened the timid out of their wits and startled the horses almost beyond control. However, they all reached town safely none the worse for their experience.

THE POPULAR SEMIFITTED PONY JACKET.

It is not a hard task nowadays to select the separate jacket for the too thin or the too stout or the medium figure, for there are such a variety of coat styles being presented. The most sought after and universally becoming cut is the semifitted poncy jacket. The model shown is made of tan cloth. The fronts are finished with straight bands of braid, which cross at the bottom and extend around the back of the coat. The white cloth vest is braided in giv, pointed at the bottom of the waist line and hooked up the front. The full leg of mutton sleeves are finished with braided turn-back cuffs, which match the collar. The three-quarter coat length sleeve is very fashionable and youthful looking, but for everyday wear is not as practical as the long sleeve. It will be worth noting that added becomingness is given to this model by the two front and back well-stitched seams. Heretofore unless a jacket had at least two seams either side of the front it was not considered ultra, but women are waking up to the fact that the simpler the garment, the smarter the lines of the figure. A marked popularity has been given to these little poncy jackets, made of taffeta silk in light colors for evening wear to slip on over the light sheer dresses. Where shirtwaists and separate skirts are worn, a jacket of this persuasion in a fashionable shade of silk will be found to be valuable adjunct to the summer wardrobe.

A Jolly Peanut Game.

The children sit around small tables, four at each. A cupful of peanuts is placed in the middle, and a small pair of bonbon tongs is provided for each table. The children try in turn to remove one peanut at a time without stirring the other nuts. If a player succeeds he is entitled to another chance until he fails, when the turn passes to the child on the left. At the end of twenty minutes a bell is rung. The player at each table having the most peanuts wins. The winners at the different tables play another round until there is but one winner.
